When it comes to reliable performance for your website or e-mail, nothing beats a dedicated server. Total control over every aspect of that server comes with a hefty price tag though, usually starting at $100 a month and easily exceeding $300 a month. Further, while performance and reliability of a dedicated server are second to none, most of what is paid for won't be understood or truly utilized by the typical business owner or performance aficionado.

Shared hosting (free to $30/month) is a great alternative, but many who rely on their internet presence for day to day tasks, like e-mail or a web application, find that over time shared hosting just does not provide the quality of service needed. Slow page loading, inaccessible e-mail, limitations in functionality and expandability all plague the shared server market.

Those who have done their research may ask, "But what about VPS : Virtual Private Servers?" A VPS does provide the performance and reliability similar to a dedicated server and is offered at prices closer to that of a shared hosting plan ($30 to $100/month). As with dedicated servers, unless the operator knows and understands the technology involved, a VPS can be confusing, frustrating, and greatly under used.

Enter our LUMS: Lightly Used Managed Servers. For all intents and purposes, a LUMS is a shared hosting server. But where most companies will host thousands of domains on one server, a LUMS never exceeds 20 per server. The end result? A unique blend of the performance, reliability, and flexibility found in a dedicated server, pricing far closer to shared hosting, and the support of a managed server environment.
